This tutorial survival guide was created for the tutorial: Calculus , Edition: 9. Associative Properties a (b) . Back-to-back stemplot trunk with leaves on both sides is used to compare the two distributions. Bearing The hour-long angle measurement that the travel line does because of the northern binomial theorem A theorem, which gives the expansion formula for $(a + b)^n$ Cause-and-effect relationship between the two variables, in which the variable response values are directly dependent on the values of the explanatory variable Complex number Expression $a + bi$, where a (real part) and b (imaginary part) are real numbers Conversion rate equal to 1 used to convert the Cotangent Unit Function $y = \cot x$ Exponential Function Form $q(x) = b^x$, where $0 < b < 1$ Independent variable representing the function domain value (usually x), k th term sequence Expression k th in the sequence Linear function function which can be written in the form of $q(x) = mx + b$, where m and b are real numbers Modulus See the absolute value of a complex number. Dumb Triangle Triangle, in which one corner is more than 90 . The reflexive property of equality is a set of space sample of all possible results of the experiment. A simple harmonic movement movement described by $d = \sin wt$ or $d = \cos wt$ Triangular form a special form for a system of linear equations that facilitates the search for a solution. The standard deviation square is a dispersal square. y -intercept Point, which lies both on the graph and on the axis. The maximum number of products that can be compared is 4.
